

will pay and, so that it is not worth while to alter the arrangement in this instance as all the other papers correspond with it. — Send therefore the papers by Murray, if he is a safe hand enough and you will receive the bills. — I will only add that I see your conduct in the same light you do yourself, and may God, as he will reward you. — Enough of this

I inclose to you as a curiosity Arnold's Note to me after settling your demand with him, it is more damnable than I thought even his conduct could be — in the first place he is ^{not} entitled to interest beyond the time of his judgment, which was the first week in February. If he was, after such an accumulated interest as he gets & putting you to the costs of a suit, renders it abominable in the extreme — I was too angry to answer his note, and resolutely determined not to pay the balance — I have heard nothing from him since, I suppose he will send again, in which case I shall answer, that I presume after his whole conduct to you that you will not pay any thing more than you are obliged to — that he is not intitled to this balance, that you have the receipt in full, but that I have written to you for instructions respecting it. —

We have nothing new — Bluff is at last actually sailed for Boston — by Dan Leavitt I wrote for your day-sad, — Adieu Yours ever most affectionately
