

so handsomely since
I had him that I really feel a very great regard for him. — His disposition is perfectly
good, and he is at present uncontaminated
with any kind of vice.
I was the more anxious to send him to you
because in this family
there is a servant-boy who is thoroughly vicious.

I will not attempt to dictate the steps to be taken with him. but his future character & conduct will be determined by the first
outset with him. —

A regular plan
should be adopted, & a tour of duty be pointed out, from which he should not on any pretense be permitted to deviate. He ought always to have two
suits