

and I have procured a servant to attend him on the passage, and I shall send with Morris, money sufficient to answer all his purposes on his first landing - I have wrote particularly to Mr. Geyer, & Mr. Coffin - and have requested their attention to him. I have also pointed out a method by which the expense of his education will be annually defrayed.

The Gentlemen passengers, have all in the gentlest manner proffered their services, especially Col. Morse. - I shall hold myself eternally obliged to him for his uncommon civility on this delicate occasion.

Thus arranged my dear Wife, is this very important matter, and I now feel a kind of consolation which is peculiar to a tender & affectionate parent, and of which I wish you to partake. and which you will necessarily enjoy because it results from
