

hundred tons, four or five miles up, but for vessels of fifty tons, eight or ten miles. — NOTE. The several names to those three first rivers were given them by the Acadian Inhabitants who formerly settled that part of the country; and they still retain them. — The river Habitant in July & August affords abundance of a fish called Shad, but a far better fish than that which is called by that name in England, and there are in Mines, Dason, very fine Codfish, Bladdocks, Safr, and flat fish of different kinds. — There are settlements on all those rivers, on the banks of which are quantities of fine land, which from being in many parts swamps and morasses, have been rendered by the ooze or mud of the rivers, very rich, and when diked in are fit for tillage, and will raise great quantities of grain. — On the south side of Cornwallis river is the township of Horton, thro' which runs also a fine river called Salmon river which abounds in Salmon & Trout in in June, July & August. — This county extends also along the Annapolis road till it meets the county of Annapolis, to within thirty six miles of the Fort. — Several settlements are upon this road, which by being intersected by several brooks and small rivers afford great quantities of fine meadow land. —

County of } The county of Annapolis
Annapolis } which joins to King's County, consists of five townships - viz. —

Wilnot, on the road to Annapolis, situate on the banks of Annapolis river navigable for canoes or flat boats of any size, to within twenty miles of Horton; It is chiefly settled by North-Irish and New-England people. — The land on the banks of this river are very fertile, either for tillage or as meadow.

Granville, on the north side of the same river extends to Annapolis, Dason, and is thirty miles in length its back towards is the Bay of Fundy. — A fine township with a quantity of marsh and meadow land, was settled at first chiefly by people from New-England but of late years some families from England, Ireland & Scotland, have purchased land there.

Annapolis