on the west side of the Island, there is also now to be seen at low water such store of muscles as is really wonderful, and of a kind peculiarly small. It is said that these muscles were gathered at the foot of the Chapel that was built there; now, as from the bed of muscles to the present high water mark the distance is many paces, and as it cannot be supposed that the Chapel was built where the tide then flowed, it is evident that the force of the sea and current must since that time in the course of nearly two centuries have worked away and considerably diminished this little isle of which there are evidently other marks to be seen for the isle is now now the sea is now constantly making; and therefore objection on account of the present size of this little isle, for the purposes for which it is named by L. Broadbent to have been used, may be fairly removed.
